Preface

The Job Accommodation Network (JAN) is funded by a grant from the Office of Disability Employment Policy, U.S. Department of Labor. JAN makes documents available with the understanding that the information be used solely for educational purposes. The information is not intended to be legal or medical advice. If legal or medical advice is needed, appropriate legal or medical services should be contacted.

JAN does not endorse or recommend any products or services mentioned in this publication. Although every effort is made to update resources, JAN encourages contacting product manufacturers/vendors and service providers directly to ensure that they meet the intended purposes. This guarantees that the most up-to-date information is obtained.

The following document is not copyrighted and reproduction is encouraged. Section 105 of the Copyright Law provides that no copyright protection is available for works created by the U.S. Government. Therefore, all works created by JAN fall under this provision. While individuals may use such work with impunity, individuals may not claim copyright in the original government work, only in the original material added. Individuals may access the full text of the law from the U.S. Copyright Office https://www.loc.gov/copyright. JAN’S Accommodation and Compliance Series

Introduction

JAN’s Accommodation and Compliance Series is designed to help employers determine effective accommodations and comply with Title I of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). Each publication in the series addresses a specific medical condition and provides information about the condition, ADA information, accommodation ideas, and resources for additional information.

The Accommodation and Compliance Series is a starting point in the accommodation process and may not address every situation. Accommodations should be made on a case by case basis, considering each employee’s individual limitations and accommodation needs. Employers are encouraged to contact JAN to discuss specific situations in more detail.

For information on assistive technology and other accommodation ideas, visit JAN's Searchable Online Accommodation Resource (SOAR) at https://AskJAN.org/soar.

Information about Postural Orthostatic Tachycardia Syndrome (POTS)

Postural Orthostatic Tachycardia Syndrome (POTS) is a form of dysfunction of the autonomic nervous system's ability to regulate blood pressure. With POTS, the body is not able to keep blood pressure at steady and stable levels. A variety of symptoms are associated with POTS, which may include but are not limited to angina (chest pain sometimes radiating down the left arm or into the jaw); dizziness or lightheadedness that often manifests during periods of prolonged periods of walking, prolonged periods of standing in one static position, or when standing up suddenly from seated positions; syncope (fainting); chronic fatigue; tremors, exercise intolerance; and gastric upset.

Postural Orthostatic Tachycardia Syndrome (POTS) and the Americans with Disabilities Act

The ADA does not contain a list of medical conditions that constitute disabilities. Instead, the ADA has a general definition of disability that each person must meet. A person has a disability if he/she has a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more major life activities, a record of such an impairment, or is regarded as having an impairment. For more information about how to determine whether a person has a disability under the ADA, see How to Determine Whether a Person Has a Disability under the Americans with Disabilities Act Amendments Act (ADAAA).
Accommodating Employees with Postural Orthostatic Tachycardia Syndrome (POTS)

People with POTS may develop some of the limitations discussed below, but rarely develop all of them. Also, the degree of limitation will vary among individuals. Be aware that not all people with POTS will need accommodations to perform their jobs and many others may only need a few accommodations. The following is only a sample of the possibilities available should any situation or need arise. Numerous other accommodation solutions may exist.

Questions to Consider:

1. What limitations is the employee experiencing?
2. How do these limitations affect the employee and the employee’s job performance?
3. What specific job tasks are problematic as a result of these limitations?
4. What accommodations are available to reduce or eliminate these problems? Are all possible resources being used to determine possible accommodations?
5. Once accommodations are in place, would it be useful to meet with the employee to evaluate the effectiveness of the accommodations and to determine whether additional accommodations are needed?
6. Do supervisory personnel and employees need training?

Situations and Solutions:

A healthcare case manager with POTS experienced a drop in blood pressure if she stood or walked for long durations.
When this occurred, she needed to sit down, otherwise she would black out and fall. The healthcare facility already had grab bars, which helped stabilize her, but the employer also moved her to a location in the facility to limit walking and provide her with close access to work-related equipment.

A new hire with POTS was beginning training for a hotel receptionist position.
The training program required long hours for multiple days in a row. The employee was able to perform the job tasks, but sitting for long periods in training caused her to feel dizzy. After the employee requested an accommodation, the employer staggered the training schedule to enable her to sit in the training in the mornings and job shadow in the afternoons. This enabled her to minimize symptoms and complete the training.

A state outreach coordinator with POTS experienced low blood pressure while sitting in traffic during her commute to the worksite for team meetings.
She was able to perform her job tasks from home, but meetings were held on site. After the employee fainted while driving, she requested remote meetings as a form of reasonable accommodation. The employer approved the request for monthly meetings and scheduled quarterly meetings ahead of time so the employee could arrange transportation.

A middle school teacher with POTS was experiencing extreme fatigue and was unable to stand all day long.
After engaging in an interactive process with her school principal, they agreed that a stand-lean stool would help her at the chalkboard. They also modified her schedule and placed her planning period in the middle of the day to help break up the more physically demanding job duties.

A federal employee with POTS asked for a reclining chair to raise their legs, which would help stabilize their heart rate.
The employer instead furnished an ergonomic chair that did not recline and a footrest. The employee was dissatisfied and called JAN to discuss next steps. The employee used a JAN sample template to help explain why the ergonomic chair and footrest were ineffective as a reasonable accommodation and why the reclining chair would be effective. After engaging in the interactive process and identifying the need for specific equipment, the employer provided the reclining chair.

Products

There are numerous products that can be used to accommodate people with limitations. JAN's Searchable Online Accommodation Resource at https://AskJAN.org/soar is designed to let users explore various accommodation options. Many product vendor lists are accessible through this system; however, JAN provides these lists and many more that are not available on the Web site upon request. Contact JAN directly if you have specific accommodation situations, are looking for products, need vendor information, or are seeking a referral.
